Driving For Work

Where driving is required for work, whether it is a regular part of your employment or a one off situation, there are responsibilities for both the employer and the employee that must be adhered to. These responsibilities are put in place to protect drivers and the people around them.

Although many of us drive regularly in our day to day lives, driving for work may involve taking irregular routes, driving long hours or using a vehicle we are unfamiliar with. Because of these and other reasons, many incidents happen due to inattention, distraction and fatigue, as well as failure to observe the Highway Code. Complying with individual and collective responsibilities will ensure that the risks associated with occupational driving are minimized and this course has been designed to make you aware of these responsibilities and learn how to risk assess various unusual driving situations. The information provided can also be used to help improve the maintenance of your every-day vehicles, improving their performance, and their impact on your wallet.

By completing this course, you will:

- Understand relevant driving at work legislation.
- Recognise the roles and responsibilities of employers & employees.
- Know how monitoring & control support driving for work.
- Understand what is required to drive company owned, leased or privately owned vehicles for work.
- Be able to adopt a pre-use checklist before driving.
- Review a range of driving guidance profiles.
- Know how to carry out a driving risk assessment.
- Assess your own Highway Code proficiency.

Test screens are included at regular intervals to help emphasise important information and a short quiz is included to help you to assess your familiarity with the current version of the Highway Code and find out if you really should improve your knowledge of the Code.

Please note: This module does not apply to LGV, PCV or minibus driving for work.
